LATE PLANTED COTTON.

The heavy rains and cold weather in April have pretty effectually killed the early planted cotton. What the water did not drown the cold has chilled, so that fresh planted seed will eatch up and go ahead of the stands already up. Cotton is emphatically a hot weather plant, and I am inclined to think, as a general rule, that we plant it too early. Bickson says the 7th of May is early enough to plant. I do not think that dates should have anything to do with heat far active. have anything to do with planting cotton, should not be planted until the ground warm enough to germinate the seed eight days from planting, for every hot that the seed remains in the ground over the seed remains the seed remain ductiveness. I know that the pleasearly planting is to get it shead of early planting is to get it shead of the caterpillar; but we may not always have the caterpillar. I planted a few acres in cotton a few years since, the 4th of June, and with the same culture and treatment, it was the best piece of cotton that I had that season. If the atands of cotton are very bad, plow up the whole field and replant. A good and even stand will pay better than the uneven patch-work of some good plants, with many yellow and sickly-looking ones.

It requires some nerve to do it, but in doparch-work of some good plants, with many yellow and sickly-looking ones.

It requires some nerve to de it, but in doing it the field is got into shape again, gullies filled, the rows even, and all will come on and grow together. Some complain of the scarcity of seed. Economize the need by dropping by hand, and make one bushel plant what it took five to plant when seed were plenty. Sted planted carefully by hand will pay in the saving of labor in chopping out. The way cotton is generally chopped out, is an outrage on culture and common sense. The choppers go along the rows, where the plants stand thick together, and with the lose chop spaces between the plants, miss times cut of ten knocking down the plants that are to remain, with a beckhanded lick of the loc. The plants are set straight again, with their roots muffated, and the tender bark besied and broken. How, because the plants does not actually dis under the operation, assistant farmers seem to think it is not furt; but a bad chopped field of cettor is retarded in figure to economize seed; conomize intervious.

The Czar in England.

After an interval of nearly sixty years another Czar has come to England. The Emperor Paul, the grandfather of Alexander II., paid a visit to the court of his best ally reckes, a merchant of New York, at the just after the downfall of the great Napoleon, and now the grandson, who despoti-Bays the Paris Kentuckian: "The aged cally rules rine; millions of human beings ourt-house in Lexington has already killed has crossed the water to visit his only laughter, who has become by marriage ar Englishwoman. His father was every inch a soldier; Alexander is the very reverse. He is and always has been good-natured, perhaps lazy, fond of his children, and of good eating and drinking, with plenty of eating and smoking. While he is no soldier, yet he is exceedingly popular with the army. He has done much to render military life comfortable-sweeping away the stiff uniforms, heavy accoutrements and stern discipline that marked his father's reign. He is the idol of the regular army, which alone amounts to a million and a quarter of men.

In 1841, when he was twenty-three years old, he was married to the Duchess Mary of Hesse Darmstad', by whom he has had six are not so much from lack of information as sons and one daughter. The Duchess fell from sanguine or billious temperaments, or sickly after the death of a son, became intensely religious, and has led of late the life of an invalid and hermit.

Alexander ascended the throne in his thir ty-seventh year. The Russian armies had just been defeated in the Crimes, the treasury was empty, and misrule and famine reigned all over the Er pire. In early manhood he was considered stupid, but the twenty years of his reign have carried Russia to a pitch of greatne sit never before attained. He has construe ed great railroads, promoted education to a surprising extent, abolished serfdom, and conquered a large portion of central Asia. If he is a fool, that class should be hereafter utilized as crowned heads; for the rule of Alexander II has certainly been extremely successful and benefi

THE cable remains silent about the cause of the arrest of the Russian Grand Duke Nicholas. It is believed that it was an attempt to seize the throne while the Czar was away junketing in England. OLD Probabilities has a French rival in the person of Charles Sainte Claire Deville. He is the Inspector General of the French meteorological stations, and has been a compiler of weather records for twenty years. His theory of prognostication is based upon the discovery of a large monthly thermo etrical oscillation of the atmosphere. In other words, he claims oscillatory advantages over our weather-Prophet.

Those per sons who read our last week's article will re collect that we expected this rise; and we still expect a rise of 3 4 of a cent more. The causes are the same as given for the New York market.

THE COMING CROP We have been asked, "What is your estimate of the growing crop?" It may seem strange to our European friends that we Southern men should differ so widely upon a subject that it is supposed we should be pretty well informed upon. The differences bias arising from interested motives of the parties making the estimates. This year we already have of estimates all the way from two and a half to four millions of bales. It is all mere guess-work, at best, so early in the season. One, a large and old cotton dealer, puts the crop at two and a half millions. Another, a large and successful farmer, estimates it at not over two and threequarters, whilst the large majority of good men with whom we have talked put it at three to three and a quarter millions. Our own quess is three and a half to three and three quarter millions, with the privilege to decrease it if any serious damage arises after this. After about a month of cent, and his people are prosperous and dry weather, we expect a very fine and growing season - say in July - of hot weather and plenty of rain; and consequently pretty general reports of splendid crops of cotton all over the South. And if this should come true, as it may, we shall this should come true, as it may be should come true. take occasion to copy this portion of this number in some future one. INCREASED PLANTING.

We hear much of this, as we believe, fallacious opinion, from all be increased. We believe there are good reasons why this viil not be the case, and all these persons who expect it are doomed to disappointment. In the first place whereever the ground has not been overplowed, i was planted early in small grain, grass or corn, except that portion intended for cotton early in the season; and we never knew a armer to plow up either of these to put in cotton; but have often known of bad stands of cotton being plowed up and the land planted in corn. We know the Southern farmer does not change his plans as to quantity of land put down to any one particular thing after about the first of April, without he is compelled sometimes to plow up his
